Sweethearts of the Old Dominion

PRIZE ESSAY

OLD Virginia with her hospitable mansions set in the midst of fertile plantations, her lordly "gentlemen" of gay attire and courtly manners, her beautiful women of hoop-skirt days and dainty minuet, her love of the high-spirited and joyous, appeals to us of more prosaic times with a romantic charm not to be caught elsewhere. As we look upon the quaint portraits of those gentlemen, dames and maids of a day gone by, and as we gaze upon the slowly rolling James from the wide portico of some colonial mansion, our thoughts turn back to those sweet old days and we dream of the lives and loves of stately dames and lovely "maides."

Perhaps we wander back to those first sweethearts of wilderness Virginia, and with our love of the romantic we picture the dusky beauties in their wild woodland life being wooed and won by brave warrior lovers. The same sympathetic moon cast its halo of charm over them that after the coming of the white man shed its radiance over the rude log cabins and mean existence of Jamestown. Nevertheless the rude log cabins and strange white men held their attraction for at least one Indian maiden. We linger lovingly over the pictures of the dear little Princess Pocahontas bringing "aide" to the stricken settlers, of her baptism and marriage at that first little church at Jamestown, of her visit to England, where she was entertained "right royally" by Queen Anne and her subjects, of her touching interview with the loyal and brave Captain John Smith. We can hear her declare to him, "You did promise Powhatan that what was yours should be his. You called him Father, being in his land a stranger—and fear you here I should call you Father. I tell you then, I will; and you shall call me child."

We leave the alluring picture of the little Princess and her Captain to turn to more stirring times in the Colony. The "eccentric and cantankerous" Governor Frances Nicholson has fallen passionately in love with the beautiful Miss Burwell of Williamsburg. We laugh merrily as we think of this strong-minded young lady firmly refusing His High and mighty Excellency. We see her toss her dainty head as the Governor in the grandeur of his carriage and four passes her on the streets of quaint old Williamsburg. It suddenly enters her lover's mind that Doctor Archibald Blair, the brother of the worthy minister of that name, is his rival. Now The Reverend Blair is the Governor's opponent in affairs vestral. When His Excellency imagines that the indomitable Scotchman's brother is the favored one of his own fair lady love, his irascible soul is moved to anger. But we suspect that his blustering speech to The Reverend Blair, "Sir, your brother is a villian, and you have betrayed me," only affords our colonial maiden much merriment; and when the peppery Governor declares that if she marries another "he would cut the throats of three persons, the bridegroom, the minister and the justice who should give the license" it daunts her independent spirit not in the least. As time has left us no record, we can only wonder if she further wounded the Governor's self-important dignity by becoming Mrs. Dr. Archibald Blair.

We turn from this amusing love story of Virginia's willful maid to the picture of "The Fair Evelyn" Byrd. We first see her at the brilliant court of Queen Anne. All eyes turn toward "the lovely American debutante" as she passes down the ballroom with the young and handsome Lord Peterborough. Her eyes are aglow with love and hope as she turns to her gay companion. What a contrast to the next picture we have of her! The all-important Colonel William Byrd has emphatically refused to allow a daughter of his to marry that Popish gentleman, Lord Peterborough. As we idly roam over the estate of beautiful old Westover, we reach the spot where stood in former days the oak under whose peaceful shade the households of Westover and Berkeley were wont to meet once each year in picnic fashion. It seems to our highly-colored imagination that the Harrisons and Byrds are again assembled in merry groups. We see "The Fair Evelyn" seated upon the green, talking in a low, sweet voice to her dearest friend, Anne Harrison. Evelyn is thinking of her lover in far-away England. She looks toward her father with an appeal in her great brown eyes. But her appeal is in vain and she lives her days at Westover in quiet longing for her Lord whom she is never to wed.

What is this next picture which calls our attention? Surely no colonial maiden was as bold as this. Yet Virginia had her Priscilla, too. Life was not without its charms in those colonial days nor was Cupid without his darts. The heart of Miss Betsy Hansford is his target this time. Truly Cupid hath strange ways. A certain youth of Williamsburg has been captured by Miss Betsy's charms but she will hear none of his suit. In his dire extremity he appeals to Mr. John Camm, the professor of divinity at William and Mary College, to aid him. In vain does the Reverend John plead with Miss Betsy, proving to her by passages of scripture that it is woman's duty to marry. His charming parishioner meets him in his own field when she tells him that he may find her answer to his entreaties in Second Samuel, twelfth chapter, seventh verse. What is his surprise and perhaps joy to find these words: "And Nathan said unto David, 'thou art the man.'" We fancy that the wedding which followed was a happy and a joyful event.

The sun is slowly disappearing over the treetops. The approaching twilight reminds us that we must cease our dreamings of things past and come back to the reality of things present. So we end our musings with this picture of that most delightful and important occasion — a colonial wedding.

“The Coin”

PRIZE STORY

ILLSON had just returned from an extended tour in Europe, and had invited several friends to spend the evening with him in his apartments, the chief feature of the entertainment to be the story of his adventures in Europe. He had knocked about the world a good bit, and had collected many interesting curios, so while his friends viewed his latest collection, he arranged the chairs about the hearth and set out the tobacco. The men appeared deeply absorbed in the collection, when one happened to spy a curious coin.

“Look here, Willson, where did you get this coin with the Latin inscription?” said one.

“Oh, I picked it up in Rome, but there is a peculiar story connected with it. I’ll tell you fellows about it, and then you can draw your own conclusions, whether you think I was crazy, drunk, or asleep.”

“It was while I was in Rome. One day I went to a curious old building to make some sketches. The room in which I was at work was rectangular in shape with a spiral stairway at one end leading to a tower. The windows were small with the sills about two feet out of my reach. The walls were smooth, but in some places a little notched. The frescoes were wonderfully well preserved, so I made several trips there and became quite friendly with the warden. I decided to spend my last afternoon in Rome, finishing my sketches of the frescoes. After I started sketching I found that I had more to do than I had thought, and became so interested in my work, that I did not notice the approach of darkness. Finding it too dark to work, I closed my portfolio and went to the door, but unknowingly the warden had locked me in. You can imagine my feelings; I was not the least bit hilarious. I had an engagement to dine with friends in the city to say nothing of the fact that my quarters were very cheerless. I tried in vain to reach one of the windows, and finally decided to make the best of the situation. After a time the moon came out, and then I amused myself watching the shadows cast by its light on the opposite walls. The shadows of the trees became huge giants, and the darkened corners of the room were their caves. Some minutes, perhaps an hour I spent thus, when I heard a distant clatter. I was sure it was the warden returning to release me so I picked up my portfolio and started for the door but the unusual direction of the sound stopped me. It came directly from the stairway which led to the tower, and it had a distinctly metallic ring. I still had no other thought than that it was the warden, but I kept quiet and waited, standing by the door, facing the stairway.

“I heard, distinctly, footsteps coming closer. The moon’s rays fell directly on the last three steps, lighting a path from the stairway to the door where I was standing. My eyes had not wavered once from the direction of the sound, and now what did I see? A man fully clad in armor. He descended the three remaining steps, as if not sure of his ground. At last he was in the room and coming toward me with outstretched hands. It seemed an age from the time he touched the bottom of the stairs until he reached me, but I was in no hurry for him to come. When he was within two feet of me, I too stretched out my hands, thinking to ward him off. Just then something cold dropped into my palm; he turned, and with great alacrity ascended the stairs.

“The door behind me opened, and turning I saw the warden. He had forgotten me when he closed the building in the afternoon, and had just happened to think of me a few minutes before while talking with some friends about the “Knight of the Tower.” So this was my visitor’s name. I said nothing about my experience, but asked him what he meant by the “Knight of the Tower.” He seemed rather loath to tell, but I finally wrung from him the story of a Roman Knight, a miser, who had lived in the old building and hoarded his wealth in the tower. The story ran that his spirit could never rest until he had given away all his treasure, and every night he came forth seeking some one on whom to bestow it.

"After I had thanked the warden, (in the American fashion), I made my way back to the hotel. When I reached my room, my first impulse was to go to the light; my next, to see what I held in my hand, and there was the coin which you see in the case.

"I may have gone to sleep and picked the coin out of the wall; you fellows may think it a product of my imagination; but I for one think the old Roman gave it to me, and hope that the gift helped to buy rest for his spirit."

REBA ANDREWS.

Twilight

PRIZE POEM

WHEN the twilight hours are golden
With the dreams of yesterday;
When a thousand wandering fancies
Steal the golden cares away;
Memory lifts the dusky curtain
Of the silent shadow-land;
Peoples all the world with phantoms
By the magic of her hand.

Eager thoughts, at last unfettered,
Through familiar pathways roam,
For the heart of each is turning
To a quiet happy home.
There a patient mother watches
Flickering shadows rise and fall.
Shifting with the changing fire-light
Over ceiling, floor and wall.

She is longing, watching, waiting,
For her children far away
And is building golden castles
In the flames' fantastic play.
Tell me, will these castles crumble?
Are her hopes and prayers in vain?
Will you shatter her illusions
And repay her love with pain?

Retrospect

I.—FALL

HE Fall, that we had been looking forward to, thinking of seeing again those dear old girls, and taking under our protecting wing those blessed new ones, yet dreading the thought of being once again closed in from all mortal eyes, (except the Kable-lights), arrived only too soon to be welcomed. But that adorable smile of Mr. King, as we stepped from the train, blotted out all pangs of regret, and made us feel once again that life at the dear old Sem was something worth while. In the same old procession we walked up those wearisome hills of Staunton, and one by one went to greet Miss Weimar. Then a rush to the back gallery, and such protestations of joy mingled with sobs of happiness are not expressible in words.

Yes, we all agreed, "It was good to be back," and such thrillingly exciting tales and adventures of the Summer, have never yet been expressed by poet or novelist, and well might they profit by them. The Summer had been ideal, but M. B. S. now seemed to fulfill every passing want. It was with regret that we old sorority girls had to give up that pleasure of having "goats" to "run up the hill" or "make my bed up this morning" because here, sororities are deemed injurious to the social welfare of the school.

Bells, "belles," bells, only to become used to them, arise on bells, eat on bells, study on bells, walk on bells, and at last settling our weary brains to rest as the melodious strains of the ten o'clock bell float up the hill. Still these were happy days, always something to do; a new song, a new dance, and plenty of study to pass our time away.

Hallowe'en was an evening enjoyed by all, being one of those rare, original affairs which only Baldwin girls can arrange and enjoy.

The Fall weather was perfect, and it was with sighs that we saw the green leaves turn red and brown, and felt that touch of Jack Frost which meant winter.

II. — WINTER — BEFORE CHRISTMAS

On the first of November we were greeted by the announcement that "The young ladies will not wear any more short-sleeved or white linen waists, as the weather is entirely too cold." This unpleasant statement brought us to realize that work had started for good and long, yet "only fifty-two days before Christmas;" that wasn't so awfully long. We were entertained by the very best of musicians during the term, hearing "The Shubert String Quartette" from Boston, Madame Lagendorf, a young and talented singer, and Mr. Ward on Shakespeare. One of the most interesting events was a bazaar planned by Miss Whidden and carried out by a committee of girls, for the benefit of the MISCELLANY. "A Christmas Bazaar" it was called, but was rather one where "eats" proved the main entertainment. It proved to be a grand success, and all desired it to be repeated. Thoughts of what Christmas vacation might bring forth tided us over those long weeks, and in many rooms might be seen long rows of beautifully cut paper dolls, which represented the days before Christmas. Nothing proved of interest for a week before the twenty-second, but what did it matter if we had to go back to Miss Riddle or Miss Strickler every day, or Madamoiselle Meriot said "I vill sen you to ze offece." Home was our goal; lessons were a minor detail. December twenty-second found us all "on the way at last."

III. — WINTER — JANUARY, FEBRUARY, MARCH

Such long faces appeared on January fifth, with the sigh, "What was I doing last night at this time, and my, but I never knew two weeks could go so fast." Now to be good, and Latin once again.

"You say the Virginia Dramatic Club is February the twelfth? What a long way off!" Only to see the Arcadians was the desire every girl held most dear. Study began with a vengeance, and the only recreation and chance of seeing a "beau" was when we walked by that quaint and interesting little store, known as "The Kable's Store." What a curiosity only to see a little further in, (the door always being so crowded we could see nothing else).

There have been numerous false fire-alarms this year, both in Hill-Top and Memorial. The real cause was never solved in Hill-Top, (but I shouldn't wonder that some know), but Memorial's excitement was owing to an innocent piece of cloth, innocently lit and thrown out of the window, and such cries of distress! (Oh!!)

The most eventful happening of this whole school year was when we were honored by the visit of two University of Virginia "gentlemen?" They seemed to be rather "happy" that night, and dared what others have never done before, boldly walked up on the Terrace by Memorial and "That wasn't all" or "It wasn't the things they meant to do, but rather the things they did." That evening has never been duplicated, and we hardly expect it to be, as the Arcadians said "it wasn't proper to serenade a young lady on the first floor after nine o'clock!"

One of the most delightful visits of the year was that of Miss Burner, Secretary to the Young Woman's Christian Association. She is a young lady, with that unusual gift of speaking directly to the girls, and holding their attention. An informal reception was given to her the afternoon before she departed, and she left a lasting memory in many a girl's heart.

Mr. Hutchinson gave us an interesting program on the night of the twenty-fifth of January, his Schumann number absolutely capturing his audience. The only drawback to the evening was the lack of self-control expressed by the young ladies of the Seminary, but we all trust it will not happen again.

Henry Ludlowe presented a very charming play, "The Raven," on the evening of the twenty-eighth. Wonders upon wonders, we children were allowed to go out two evenings in one week.

A new and attractive feature at M. B. S.—Miss Lilian Gorham

Harrison gave a tea in the girls' parlor on Friday afternoon, January the twenty-ninth, to a few of her friends, in honor of Miss Lucie W. Lamb and Miss Helen Nix. It was an affair enjoyed by all present, and one through which we hope others may profit.

To the visit of the two "gentlemen" from Charlottesville, the Arcadians proved next in importance. Well, there is no doubt but that it was splendid and "no words are needed here." We do surely hope the performance will be repeated.

The members of the board of editors of the Literary Society served a delightful supper for the benefit of the ANNUAL. It proved a success and the ones who labored felt repaid for their energy.

The four remaining members of the Delta Sigma Phi Sorority gave a select dinner, the night of the thirteenth of February, in honor of one of their visiting sisters.

The Young Woman's Christian Association was very successful in a bazaar they gave on Saturday, March the thirteenth. There were seven booths representing the different nations, very artistically and originally decorated, the gymnasium becoming thereby a very pretty room rather than the cold, dismal "gym" we dance in every night. The different costumes added much, and "The Street Fair" proved very satisfactory as well as amusing.

Mr. Samuel Moore, of West Virginia, led a series of meetings in the Presbyterian Church, a few weeks ago. His earnestness and power of appealing, brought every girl under his charm, and all listened with unwavering interest. All feeling of the burden of attendance was at once forgotten after Mr. Moore's first sermon, and it was with regret that we knew the meetings were ended. I do not think any man has before so impressed the girls as Mr. Moore did, nor found such a response in their hearts.

We can at last say Winter has left us and once again come those bright, happy, wholesome days of Spring.

IV. — THE END

Spring with all its pleasures, sports and sunshine has come at last, and just March, April, May, and this happy school year will have its end. My, how we want to leave this place, and every lesson is a grudge, but, stop to think just how many tally-ho rides, feasts, (and midnight feasts), how many germans and banquets we have had during this session. Then, say we don't have a good time at M. B. S. Besides these pleasures, think of the lessons we have learned, the temptations we have overcome, and notice how these hours at the Seminary have helped to mold our characters and prepare us for the far more serious life than happy, free, school days offer. It is true we have but Christmas vacation and one or two holidays thrown in here and there: also, that we are most emphatically impressed with the fact that the Mary Baldwin Seminary is not a society school. Yet, I can say, and have heard others say, that society does not make a school, for teas, dances, receptions, and last, but not least, men are not essential to a school girl's happiness.

As this eventful year draws to its close we think of the friendships we have made, that beautiful love between girls which is so seldom true. Then, of the fact that all of us will never again be together at one time. This household of over two hundred girls is under one head, Miss Weimar. We do not realize how much we owe to her, and probably shall not until we are older. Miss Martha Riddle, our principal when Miss Weimar is away, has reached the heart of every girl who has ever studied with her, and many others besides. Mrs. Chase, that generous, loving, and noble-hearted "mother" of our school days at M. B. S., is not half appreciated, but some of us do realize there never can be but one "Mother" Chase. But of all the kindest, cheeriest, as well as best persons in this world, Mr. King is ahead of them all. From the time he greets us as we get off the train, till he waves us farewell as we fly homeward, he has always that ever-winning smile, and a sweet word for every one of us, that makes each one feel, as we leave his office, "he likes me best."

It is now time to bring this Retrospect to a close. We are loath to leave this dear school but hope that the new girls of next year may have as many happy times as we have had. It is our fondest hope that all may have a happy and restful Summer, and we drink to the future success of the Mary Baldwin Seminary.

O happy days, those days of yore,
Will they come back to us no more?
Yet we live them o'er and o'er —
Those days at M. B. S.

School Song

Tune: TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP, THE BOYS ARE MARCHING

M. B. S. the name we sing,
And our voices proudly ring,
As we join the mighty chorus
Full and strong.
Though our paths divided be,
We are loyal, true to thee,
Home of the happiest schoolgirl days—
The M. B. S.

CHORUS

White and yellow float forever
Colors bravest and the best;
Hark! the echoes catch the strain,
Sounding back the glad refrain:
White and yellow float forever,
M. B. S.

On the hillside green she stands,
Beacon-light to distant lands,
While the colors float above her
Fair and free.
Daughters fond from far and near
Pay a loving tribute here.
Fame hath wreathed the portals old
Of M. B. S.

Pages from the M. B. S. Primer

Here is a picture of M. B. S. Do you see the brass dogs? The sign over the door says, "A WIN-TER RE-SORT." Young ladies from all over the U-ni-ted States come here to at-tend dances and to meet el-i-gible young men.

No, lit-tle chil-dren, this young lady is not ad-ver-tis-ing a mil-li-ney store, she is just read-y to go for a walk. All the young ladies like to take walks, and some times they are al-lowed to go. Would-n't you like to grow up and go to M. B. S.?

O, my! no! this is not a picture of a de-part-ed spi-rit but a real, sure e-nough "Pri-vi-leged Girl." They are al-lowed to wear wings. Don't you wish you were pri-vi-leged, and could wear wings?

These young ladies have missed their La-tin les-son, but they are not a bit a-fraid, for you do not have to know your La-tin. La-tin pu-pils never have to stu-dy.

This is a lit-er-ary ed-i-tor of the BLUE-STOCKING. She is a beau-ti-ful crea-ture with flow-ing yellow hair. She is very smart and "kin rite poems and sto-ries." Wouldn't it be nice to be a lit-er-ary ed-i-tor?

A FABLE

Once there was a girl who came to M. B. S. and she was very smart. She did not have to stu-dy a bit but missed her les-sons ev-ery day, but she was such a smart girl that they gave her a di-plo-ma and she went away and taught in a U-ni-ver-si-ty.

See the tea-cher! Is she not sweet? She loves to take the girls out walk-ing for the girls are always so nice and po-lite. She does not be-lieve in hard stu-dies, so she gives very short les-sons, and her work is very light for she has no-thing to do but keep in a good hu-mor. She thinks all girls should learn to cook over a gas-jet, and that prowling a-round the halls after light bell is the best way to keep health and rules.

The young ladies are all very shy and if, when out walk-ing, they re-fuse to bow to a strange gen-tle-man, they are se-vere-ly pun-ished. They must go to the "of-fice" and en-ter-tain this same young man for two hours. The stu-dents are all com-pel-led to write notes and let-ters to young men so as to im-prove their lit-er-ary style.

The Coming of Doctor Moore

When first we heard of Doctor Moore

To church that night we grumbling crept.

We frowned, and fumed it was a bore —

And then we stretched — and yawned — and slept.

When one short week was almost o'er

To church with smiles we quick did speed.

We fought for seats near Doctor Moore

Who quickly won us to his creed.

At Baldwin's now the dullness palls.

No feasts! no cooking! shocking sights!

We're all P. C.'s upon the halls,

Forgotten gum and Kableites.

The Echoes

MOONLIGHT fades and starlight deepens,
Weary waves are rocked to rest;
Heavy clouds, in quiet slumber,
Crown the dreamy mountain crest.

Time delays his ceaseless marching,
Ever wandering winds are still;
For the echoes of the ages
Earth and sky with music fill.

Voices from forgotten nations,
Whispers from a world long past,
By the keeper of the caverns
From their chains are freed at last.

All the echoes have been treasured
By the jealous god of sound,
Histories of every people
In his gloomy caves are found.

When earth's kingdoms all have crumbled
And their builders are no more,
When the wailing winds search vainly
Signs of life on hill or shore.

Rocky sepulchers will open,
Echoes will be free again;
The great past will live in shadows,
And unbounded chaos reign.

Summer Dreams

I.

She has left this school forever, and with suit case, hat and sack,
She sits beside the window, speeding swiftly down the track—
She thinks of all the girls she's met—their struggles and their fun—
Of the times she went to office and other things she's done.
And then she sees her friends at home and also what she'll do—
And somehow at the thought of these, they thrill her thro' and thro'.

II.

She lives in California, in that land of flowers and fruit—
She can see herself in swimming in her new red bathing suit.
She's now out in the ocean while the waves rock her about,
And she hears the people talking—with now and then a shout.
She sees the giant waves as they break with one loud crash—
But just before they reach her, how thro' them she will dash.

III.

She thinks of all the parties and the dances she'll attend—
The flowers, the song, the music, and last of all, the men.
She thinks of who she'll dance with and picks from all the rest—
The one that she'll dance most with or the one that she likes best.
And then she'll "cut a dance" to some fellow's great dismay,
Just to hear the "last goes" and the rest "he" has to say.

IV.

She wonders if "he" loves her in just "the same old way",
Or if some one else has interferred and led his love astray.
"And if he does", she dreams on, and her heart brims o'er with glee,--
"Twill not be long before once more we'll sit beneath our tree.
And perhaps he'll say he loves me and tell me from his heart,
That there can be no other, and hopes we'll never part.

V.

And if he does, she wonders if the wedding will be soon,
Or if she'll have to wait awhile until the month of June.
She pictures how they'll look as they walk up side by side,
To receive the pastor's blessing and become a groom and bride.
And when the wedding's over—and they're one instead of two—
Her troubles will be ended—for with boarding school she's thro'.

—MARSHA JONES.

Toast

WE drink to the world behind us,
To the memories that seem so fair.
We've drunk to the world around us,
To its pleasures, its woes, it's care.
We've drunk to the world before us,
In the light of all our sins,
So now fill up the glasses
And drink to Old Baldwin's.

Before and After

This is what Syrup and Rolls did.

A year at this finishing (?) school did this.

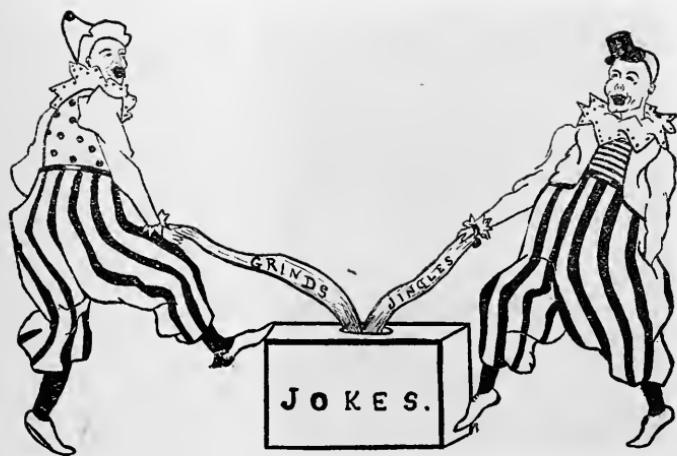

And the Flirts became Missionaries

Prize Alphabet

AN M. B. S. ALPHABET

A is for all of us — little and big,
Sent to this M. B. S. to study and “dig.”

B’s for our bells — the new and the old;
What the new cow-bell’s for, we’ve never been told.

C stands for Chaplain; Dr. Fraser, we mean.
His half-hour sermons are yet to be seen

C stands for “Cableites” — alack and alas!
Who by the school do their gallant forms pass.

D is Directoire, the new M. B. S. craze;
Here’s hoping it’s shorter the longer it stays.

E stands for empty — that’s how we all feel
When promptly (?) at two the dinner bell peal.

F stands for two things — failure and fake,
The last means the “golf-links,” the former we make.

G’s for the groans which arose on that day
From the girls who were kept from the U. Va. play.

H is for Heaven, and other things, too.
Some say Mary Baldwin’s; I wonder, don’t you?

I stands for something that everyone knows,
That blessed Infirmary, the cure for all woes.

J you must know, a jelly-glass means,
That fELL on a caller — he thought we were fiends.

K is for “killing,” a very apt phrase
When applied to the lessons that fill all our days.

L ’s the “Lit.” Society and though not new this year,
So much has it broadened that I record it here.

M's for the mail that comes thrice a day.
Oh, the bliss of a letter from — well, "someone" away!

N is the very worst letter I know,
To its place in this "jingle" it simply won't go.

O is for "Office," dark visions arise,
Of Saturdays — dictionary — poems — and sighs

P is for "privilege," I speak it with grief.
Only the angels arrive, there's my belief.

Q is the question that each asks in fear,
And I'll warrant the answer is Zero. Oh, dear!

R's for the rules that we meet at each turn.
If you think we can't break them, you've something to learn.

S's are sad-sounding, sorrowful days,
Oft brightened by flowers — I refer to "soirees."

T's for the terraces, and if they could talk,
You'd hear of the "cases" that love there to walk.

U is the Uniform hat you'll perceive.
The most beautiful (?) thing in the world, I believe.

V's the Virginia boys, of whom we hold,
An opinion I'd tell you, but maidens aren't bold.

W's Miss Weimar, our Principal dear.
Come, girls, lets give her a good rousing cheer.

X, Y, Z, & ^{at last,}
And one more year of school life past.

And now that I've finished, I wish there were more,
For on M. B. S. glimpses I now close the door.

— NANCY COOPER.

A. B. S. Maids

See the Baldwin Maids rush in,
Hear the clatter and the din
As they slip upon the floor,
Dropping cups and plates galore;
Bumping hard against your chair,
Spilling coffee in your hair.
Water down the table flows,
Knives go skimming by your nose.
For our plates they roughly dive,
Glad are we to leave alive.

What Other Women Have Found Out

[The Editor takes great pleasure in furnishing the Faculty with hints for their personal welfare, feeling sure that their loving interest in its welfare will be valued and appreciated.]

My voice often cracks—emits hoarse discords. Is there any remedy for this trouble? C. L. P.

Your case is very extraordinary and cannot be entirely cured. Try filling the cracks with Liquid Veneer and carefully grease the interior surface with "Three in One Oil."

I am a teacher in a girl's school. Of late I have heard no noise on my hall during the night. I feel sure that this must be on account of deafness. Please suggest a remedy if possible for I enjoy reporting girls. B. C. L.

The best cure that we can offer is that of Dr. G. C. Powell. See Lippincott's for January, 1909.

My "ideas" are manifold and important. How can I have them repeated for the public good without annoying the hearers? H. S. P. W.

Scream your "ideas" into a Victor talking machine and they will be accurately reproduced. But the best good you could do the public would be to lock them in an iron chest and bury it deep.

Being very stout, as the summer approaches, I very much dread the effects of the warm weather. Can you recommend any safe and speedy remedy to reduce my superfluous flesh.

A bottle of Schlitz taken after every meal will speedily reduce your flesh.

Can you tell me of any eye screen which will not mar my beauty? I have tried for years to find one. S. McL. *

Your need can easily be filled by a simple device. Have made a light wooden frame high and broad enough to include your figure when seated. To the top of this attach a Winslow shade of dimensions to fit the frame, lower shade to floor and punch tiny hole at the height of your eyes. Place screen immediately in front of you, sight carefully through hole and you can see every girl and not one can see you. We guarantee this to be very becoming.

I am exceedingly nervous and melancholy. What can I do to divert my mind? M. L. M.

Buy a pack of Congress cards and a copy of "Elwell on Bridge." If you fail to understand anything, information will be cheerfully given you by any member of the M. B. S. bridge club, which frequently meets on your hall. If this treatment fails apply a coat of Sherwin-Williams paint. The last ad. guarantees to "Brighten-up" whatever it touches.

I have heard by good authority that there was once a Civil War in the United States. If this be true, please advise me where I can find authentic information on the subject.

M. D. R.

There was a Civil War from 1861 to 1865. In order to do justice to the other side you should read at least a page written from the Northern standpoint. For further information send us a self-addressed and stamped envelope.

Many people suffer from fear of mice but I am mortally afraid of a cat. How can I overcome this?

A. M. S.

You cannot get rid of the cat but by tying a bell to its tail you will always know when it's coming and have time to run.

Has anything been invented to give a person a bouncing walk without exertion on their part.

S. G. F.

A small spring to be worn inside the shoes are made, but we cannot give you the address. It is a secret?

Miss Eastman: Your question cannot be answered here. This department is for the members of the Faculty who have neither time or inclination to help with the ANNUAL.

Mlle. Meriot: We are unable to answer your question as we do not understand any language but English.

Fraulein Geiger. See above.

Is it necessary for orchestras to have leaders?

B. B. W.

We do not answer musical questions but refer you to Miss Weimar at M. B. S. and Josef Hofman in L. H. J. Note: Leaders are sometimes taken ill.

M. L. M.: "Is your brother in the Calvary, Elizabeth?"

W. G.: "What's the score?" (In Tennis).

Other Girl: "Fifteen all."

W. G.: "Who's ahead?"

Music Teacher: "What is that written in R——?"

R. B.: "Nothing, nothing."

I. W.: Wore her atlas out looking for Charlemagne.

B. G.: "I can't find Africa anywhere." (Looking on a map of Cis-Alpine Gaul).

Richmond Girl to New York Girl: "I forgot to tell you! I am going home on the 20th to welcome the fleet. Have a brother who is an officer."

New York Girl: "What fleet?"

Richmond Girl: "Goodness, don't you know? or have you heard of the fleet?"

New York Girl: "Y-e-s, b-u-t, I didn't know Richmond was on the coast before; my geography is very poor."

Richmond Girl: "Goosie! not to Richmond — Hampton Roads."

New York Girl: "O yes, but I didn't know Hampton Roads was situated on the coast before."

(A Richmond girl did not put this in, or a New York girl, either).

Teacher: "Who was Beelzebub?"

Girl: "He was the Prince of Wales in ——"

Physic Teacher: "What is space?"

Pupil: "Something that costs five dollars a page in the 'ANNUAL.'"

Nellie: Papa, why do people cry at weddings?

Papa: Most of them have been married themselves.

HEARD IN GEOMETRY CLASS

L.— Well, suppose this line was longer and the other smaller.

Teacher — That would be true just the same, only the circle would be of a different shape!

(Explains the construction of a \odot).

M. H.—“Where does Parliament meet?”

Other Girl—“It meets in Washington.”

Another Girl—“Indeed it does not, it meets in Richmond.”

A University boy, growing very impatient waiting for some lamb chops on a buffet car, on his way to Richmond for a track meet, was heard to exclaim by an M. B. S. girl: “They must be killin’ that cow out there.”

M.—“Who did Bryant marry?”

E.—“Thanatopsis, wasn’t it?”

Music Teacher: “Evelyn, what did ‘Shubert’ write?”

Evelyn: “Shubert Stringed Quartette.”

B. G. became very indignant the other day. Some one told her her nose turned down. She very hotly replied that her nose did not turn down. It turned up, because she had been told so all her life.”

The other day a crowd of girls were speaking of political affairs. Some one asked Willey Gayle if she liked such, and she very quickly responded: “Yes, I am crazy about ‘po-LITICS.’”

First Girl—“Mary Mellon has a very hard time.”

Second Girl—“It seems to me she gets along VERY ‘Easley.’”

The Path of Spring

HAVE you ever followed the path of Spring
Where the grass is tender and green?
As soon as it snows it melts away
And dandelions are seen.

You’d not get far if you followed,
For I tried it once and I found
’Twas only a place on the terrace
Where a pipe runs under the ground.

Appreciations

*"If by these you are sorely bit
'Tis but a sign the cap doth fit."*

E. D. H. "Trust not complexion all too much."

Agnes A. "Musicians are known by their hair."

Nellie D. "'Tis an easy thing to write and sing
But to write true unfeigned verse is very hard."

A. M. A. "So fair and fresh as freshest flower in May."

K. Osborne. "A mischief-making monkey."

Helen Nix. "To follow foolish precedents and wink
With both our eyes, is easier than to think."

Electa and Bessie. "Who relished a joke and rejoiced in a pun."

Soiree. "This will last out a night in Russia
Where nights are longest there."

Maggie T. "What is strength without a double share of wisdom?"

? "Flat burglary as ever was committed."

Anne, Lamb, and Lillian. "Done to death by slanderous tongues."

M. Hoge. "'Tis good in every case, you know,
To have two strings unto your bow."

L. A. P. "There swims no goose so gray but soon or late
She'll find some honest gander for her mate."

M. L. M. "With eyes upraised as one inspired Pale Melancholy sits retired."

Sarah N. "None that I more love than myself."

Hester R. "I speak too loud."

Anne H. "Tall and stately she moves through the hall."

- Irene W. "Scared out of seven senses."

E. P. to E. W. " The god(dess) of my idolatry."

Mary Neil. " A good mouth filling oath."

Cases. " Love sought is good but given unsought is better."

Marie Noel. " I'll not budge an inch."

Martha B. " I never knew so young a body with so old a head."

E. Going. " I'll speak in a monstrous little voice."

M. Boyd Ayer. " My lungs began to crow like chanticleer."

V. M. S. " And when I ope my lips, let no dog bark."

Eloise Morrison. " As merry as the day is long."

Ruth Rankin. " Does not divide Sunday from the week."

Faculty. " Are you good (wo)men and true?"

H. Mohler. " I am the very pink of courtesy."

Six O'clock P. M. " And (wo)men sit down to that nourishment (?)
which is called supper."

Don'ts

Speak to a teacher, unless she speaks to you.

Drink coffee with the spoon in your cup.

Flirt out of Memorial windows.

Drop notes to the "Cable-lights" out walking.

Talk to young gentlemen out of the windows at the end of New Building.
It won't work, for it has been tried.

Smoke cigarettes, for Baldwin girls are above such things.

Get caught at midnight feasts; it isn't advisable.

Think you're "it" until you find out."

Tell us S. N. is not in love.

Say Lady A. hasn't a rival.

Believe that R. C. E. isn't the candy kid.

Wear a coat in the dining room. You might be asked to open up.

Look out the window or a Cable-light might be passing.

Set step-ladder against the doors; it might kill someone.

Serenade the young ladies of the Sem. after nine o'clock.

Walk on the terrace after a rain. You might get sent in for rubbers.

Be affectionate and embrace each other. You might be told to un-embrace.

Do fantastic stunts on the practice hall.

Break bottles and the Sabbath at the same time.

Hang pictures on the wall, they might be stolen.

Speak in the Seminary — it is bad form.

Look at the librarian; you might be demerited.

Shout "White and yellow; it pleases — the principal enjoys it.

Laugh at musicians; you will ruin your reputation.

Let a teacher read your ANNUAL; it might ruffle her disposition.

Play (?) tennis — you will be sent to office.

Leave your room during quiet hour. You might be observed by a teacher from over a transom.

Put a rug over an alcohol lamp; it might explode.

Play for too high stakes; it would take all of your allowance.

Flirt with a man on a billboard, although he is two blocks off. It often might deceive you.

Get up until 7:25; you might have to wait for breakfast.

Eat in Chapel; the teacher might be jealous.

Have a case; it isn't rational.

Talk to P —; she will misinterpret all you say.

Worry Mrs. Chase or Mr. King. The editors will hold you responsible.

Get mad at anything in the ANNUAL. It will prove that the cap fits and that you have a nasty disposition.

Theatrical Notes

Elizabeth King is endeavoring to support the title role of "Miss Innocence."

Miss Katie Osborne's success as leading lady in "Mlle. Mischief," has met with great approval.

We regret the lack of appreciation of Miss Agnes Agee's wonderful interpretation of "Strongheart?"

Owing to the inadequate seating capacity of the house, few were able to witness Miss Jones' success in "The Soul Kiss." It is reported, though, that the young artist supported her role with enthusiasm and sang-froid.

The co-star production by Miss Hoge and Miss McCleary of "Mlle. Modeste," has been most successful.

Miss Nellie Dill's production of "Miss Simplicity" is worthy of notice, especially for her marvellous silk gown worn in the "school room" scene.

After a number of unsuccessful attempts, the "Merry Widow" has found its real "Sonia" in Miss Lucie Lamb.

Miss Elonia Hutcheson in "His House in Order," has made one of the greatest hits of the season.

Miss Josephine Willis has eclipsed Lady Anne McLemore in "The Great White Way." Miss McLemore is now about to start on her career as a prima donna in her "Lady in White."

Miss Marie Easley's dancing is the main feature of "The Waltz Dream."

Miss Whiteside is trying for the leading role in the "College Widow."

Miss Elizabeth Thomas has achieved her highest ambition in "Her Great Self."

"The Spring Chicken" has been again revived. The theatre-goers of 1905 will hear with pleasure that the original star, Miss Mary Boyd Ayer, will take the title role this season.

Theatre-goers will be sorry to hear that Miss Edna Chase in "Herself-Brittina" has been called from the stage for this season. She will probably not appear again in Staunton.

Misses Nix and Osenton are trying for the title role in "The Rivals."

"A Stubborn Cinderella" is most suitably presented by "Miss Marie Noel."

Miss Florence LeMoine gives a delightful interpretation of "Polly of the Circus."

Miss Mary Neil Mellon gives a picturesque representation of Pixley's new operetta "Marcelle."

“ Love Watches ” is being faithfully produced by Miss Sarah Nichols.

Miss Kate Earle Terrell displays her remarkable talent in that powerful play, “ The Right of Way.”

“ Wildfire ” is cleverly produced by that brilliant young actress, Miss Mary Osborne.

Miss Katherine Johnston most picturesquely portrays “ The Parisian Model.”

“ The Belle of New York ” is charmingly displayed by Miss Kathleen Woodward.

“ The Girl of the Golden West ” is most loyally given by Miss Mary Hover.

Miss Anne M. Apgar most courageously upholds her role in “ The Yankee Prince.”

One of the most original interpretations of the season is that of “ Little Nemo,” by Miss Margaret S. Terrell.

Miss Ethel Davies has successfully produced “ The Call of the North ” this season.

We are glad that Miss Hester Riddle has had no rival in “ What Every Woman Knows.” She is the real person for this production.

The Baldwin Girls

AS SEEN BY AN S. M. A. CADET

ALTHOUGH lectures on the specie are seldom heard in the "jail-like" building, yet, owing to the close proximity of the two schools, further enhanced by the fact that the "Sem." is a forbidden place,—these together with the natural allurements of the fair sex, it would seem inhuman, not to say inhumane, that an S. M. A. Cadet was not fully capable to judge the various eccentricities, lovelinesses, girlish traits, womanly curiosity, etc., of the Baldwin Girl.

As scientists declare that the intelligence of woman is much superior to that of man, let us accept with due grace and all humility the inevitable, and follow the said insinuation with that customary condescension that typifies the S. M. A. Cadet, and copy after our "Baldwin Sister" in giving our outline below:

- I. Who are they? Just girls,—some of them pretty.
- II. Where do they dwell? In a temple,—so near and yet so far from the sidewalk.
- III. Where usually found? Strolling in an irregular "column of twos" on Frederick Street.
- IV. Favorite resort: Seminary lawn.
- V. Favorite occupations? (As it appears when a risky Cadet passes the "Sem."). Peeking from behind curtains and drying hair in the sun.
- VI. Most frequent occupation? "Banging the ivories."
- VII. Chief amusement? Blushing in Church.
- VIII. Most important girl in "Sem." (Judging from fussed appearance). The first one in "the line."
- IX. Greatest accomplishment? Making a Cadet grin.
- X. Most valued possession? What appears to be a hat. (Style a la Paris, 1852).
- XI. Favorite expression? "Oh, girls, there's a Cadet!"
- XII. Favorite Song? "Won't You be My Baby Boy."
- XIII. Favorite motto? "Love IS 'King'".

NOTICE!

I would like to have some kind friend tell me how to overcome the terrible fits of bashfulness that I am subject to during History. I learn my lesson perfectly, but when the teacher calls on me to recite, my tongue cleaves to the roof of my mouth and refuses to move. I cannot so much as get my breath until the teacher calls on some one else. I have had zero on every recitation since school began on account of my bashfulness, and the teacher threatens to suspend me if I do not make a recitation soon. Kind friend, I must have an immediate and permanent cure. Cannot some one suggest one and thus win my heartfelt gratitude forever?

E. R.

The fraction leaned over and touched the whole number on the shoulder. "Say," she whispered, nervously, "is my numerator on straight?"

They were sitting side by side,
He sighed and she sighed;
Said he: "My dearest idol,"
He idled and she idled;
" On my soul there's such a weight,"
He waited and she waited;
" I'd ask your hand, so bold I've grown,"
He groaned and she groaned;
" You should have your private gig,"
He giggled and she giggled;
Said she, " My dearest Luke,"
He looked and she looked;
" I'll have thee if thou wilt,"
He wilted and she wilted.

A Latin student gave the principal parts of "To skate" as follows:
"Skate, slippere, fallus, bumptum."
The professor marked the paper:
"Fail, failere, flunxi, suspendum."

There was a grass widow quite proper,
Who was formerly married to Hopper;
But he got a divorce,
As a matter of course,
And the grass widow is now a grasshopper.

Life is real, life is earnest.
And it might be made sublime,
If we were not kept so busy
Studying Latin all the time."

Cæsar conquered many nations,
A mighty man was he;
No wonder in examinations
He also conquered me.

Running a paper is like poking a fire. Everyone thinks he can do it better than the one who has the poker.

Teacher — Yes, girls, nearly all the young ladies who have attended M. B. S. and who are now married, have brought their husbands here at various times to show them the school.

Nelle — Well, I would not.

Teacher — Nelle, if I were you, I would bring him here and let him see the other girls, so that he could see that he had "Picked a Lemon in the Garden of Love."

New puns are hard to find:
The greatest editorial staff
Can't tickle every mind.
So, if you meet some old style joke
Patched up in modern guise,
Don't fuss and say the thing's a fake,
Just laugh — don't be too wise.

Are you reading this in your own ANNUAL?

Lives of editors remind us
That our lives are not sublime,
That they have to work like thunder
To get their copy in on time.

She failed in Latin
Flunked in Chem.—
They heard her softly hiss,
" I'd like to find
The man who said
That ignorance is bliss."

Oh where, oh where can the dear frats be,
Oh where, oh where have they gone;
With the fun stopped short and the goatling gone,
Oh what, oh what can that school be?

THE BELLS

There are bells for every hour
As duties for every day;
'Till I think time couldn't travel
If some one stole them away.
'Twould be a motley procession —
Hours and minutes awry —
All of the records would dally,
And all of the moments fly.
Just imagine, during Latin,
If no welcome bell should ring,
All the terror and the torment
That the extra hour might bring?
Should the guardian of clocks
Call before 'twas time to rise,
We might find a smoking breakfast —
It would be a great surprise.
If old Time was not reminded,
And always kept to the dot,
Can you tell me what would happen
To the minutes he forgot?

DREAMLAND

There's a tiny race of people,
Cunning, clever, child-like folk,
Who build castles in the woodlands
'Neath the olive, elm and oak.

On the banks of bubbling streamlets
Slipping, sliding, silvery streams,
Happy elves with nimble fingers
Weave our dainty, dancing dreams.

— NELLIE WELTHEA DILS.

A is a maid of winning charm,
B is a snug encircling arm;
How many times is A in B?
He questioned calculatively.
Said the maid with a boldness great,
"That's not quite clear, please demonstrate."

She thanked them all for everything,
From Christmas card to diamond ring;
And, as her gifts she gaily flaunted,
Told each one, "Just what I wanted."
But I, who had no cash to blow,
Just kissed her 'neath the mistletoe.
She blushed a bit, but never daunted
Repeated low, "Just what I wanted!"

The time is told in golden note
At seven before we rise,
When happy dreams and fancies float
Before our dazzled eyes.

But rising bell, with harsh delight,
Recalls our tasks undone,
Scatters the visions of the night,
Heralds the cruel sun.

Then laden hours slowly pass
Upon their weighted wings;
Dragging reluctant girls to class
Till two a respite brings.

But surely the time does move,
To-day must be to-day;
Besides, so far, the histories prove
To-morrow can't delay.

So somewhere if records are true
Vacation days must wait.
Cheer up! and let this comfort you —
They can not come too late.

— M. G. B.

There once was a lady named Whidden
Who from sight at a soiree was hidden.
The piano went wrong,
The girls burst into song,
And next time she will stay where she's bidden.

Preaching forever in one tone,
Reaching both far and near.
If you will not cease your drone
Shut your door so we can't hear.

There once was a person called Helen—
To say her last name would be tellin'.
She'd a voice like a bull,
That nothing could lull—
The sight of her even was killin'.

A is for ANNUAL, which you have here,
And paid for by work very hard and dear.

N is for none which with it can compare,
And if you try, sorrow will be your share.

N is for quite a number of things herein
Which are not as good as they might have been.

U is for us, who have slammed and praised,
And wrought for ourselves hatred for all our days.

A is for all who in this have taken part,
Hearty thanks be to them from the depths of our hearts.

L is for Lamb, our Editor-in-Chief,
Without whom this book would have gone to grief.

WHITE STAR MILLS
Manufacturers of
HIGH GRADE FLOURS

¶ We guarantee every sack and barrel of flour to be up to the standard we have established on our goods. The question, "How can we with impunity do this?" is easily answered, as follows:

¶ We are located in the heart of the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, where the wheat is the peer of any grown in the Union.

¶ We have one of the BEST EQUIPPED MILLING PROPERTIES IN THE SOUTH, manned only by those who know how to mill in the most careful and skilled manner.

¶ Why do you buy cheap flour made from sprouted and damaged wheat, when for a few cents per barrel more you can secure a flour that will give your trade absolute satisfaction.
